FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

DEBORAH CORAM APPOINTED AS LDSI UK MANAGING DIRECTOR

London, New York and Sydney, 14 December 2007 – London-based Legal Document Services International, (LDSI) the world's first truly-global provider of a complete range of forensically-sound legal document services, announced today that Deborah Coram, formerly President and CEO, Coram Consulting, is to become the Managing Director of LDSI business operations in the United Kingdom.

Consistent with LDSI's continued growth and development, Ms. Coram's extensive background in law, as a practicing attorney and former head of international business development at CT Summation and Director of Sales and Marketing for CT CaseVault, along with significant past experience building and managing a major litigation support company in Australia, brings the perfect mix of skills, leadership and industry recognition to the role. Timed to coincide with the company's recent expansion of operations in London, as well as new full-service facilities in Brussels, Los Angeles and Sydney (in addition to New York which launched at the beginning of 2007), Ms. Coram's appointment paves the way for the company's current Joint-UK Managing Directors, Noel Kilby and Mark Wagstaff, to assume their new positions as corporate heads of technology and operations, respectively, to best support the enlarged global organization.

In addition to her experience as an attorney, gained in practice at leading Australian law firms, Minter Ellison and Arnold Bloch Leibler, Ms. Coram has undertaken a Masters Degree in Information Management Systems. She has consulted on substantial international litigation matters, assisted in the development of law firm litigation support departments and is a frequent conference speaker, moderator and published writer, on a range of important industry subjects. Ms Coram has also recently assisted in the founding of the new ALSP (Association of Litigation Support Professionals), a non profit organization committed to the development of certifications and standards within the litigation support industry, and she currently holds the positions of Board Member, Secretary and Treasurer.

Larry Morris, Chairman & CEO of LDSI commented “It is rare to come across such an accomplished leader with this type of global perspective, credentials and experience in litigation technology and practice support. After working extensively with Deborah earlier this year as a consultant, in the planning and launch of LDSI's new operations in Sydney, where we delivered a comprehensive presentation to one of Australia's largest-ever conferences on Electronic Discovery, entitled “Litigating in the Global Economy”, we quickly realized we wanted to formalize LDSI's working relationship with her. Upon discovering that Deborah also had significant past experience working with leading law practices in London (while leading international business development for CT Summation), it was clear she would be the perfect Director for our flagship office. She assumes the management of LDSI's UK business operations at the perfect time, as the company launches a new suite of proprietary applications and support services, and moves to significantly-expanded facilities in London during February, 2008. This is a fantastic leadership appointment for LDSI'.

Further, Ms Coram added

“I'm genuinely excited to be joining a company whose philosophy, vision and global perspective on litigation support coincide with my own. Electronic discovery has brought the importance of cohesive international litigation support to the forefront, and LDSI is one of the few companies poised to embrace that, supporting clients around the world, wherever data and documents may be stored. I look forward to bringing my experience from Australia and the US to a leading provider in the EU, where corporations and law firms can be confident that their data will be handled by a company whose people and processes meets and fully understand their requirements.”

Ms Coram will take over her responsibilities as Managing Director early in the New Year.

Global Reach, Local Touch

Legal matters have become substantially more complex, crossing borders, languages and technology platforms. Corporations and their counsel often must navigate increasingly hostile and often conflicting, unique local issues – both legal and technical. Issues resolved one way in one country often don't work in another. Working with multiple legal document vendors on a global matter weakens legal accountability and service efficiency. And it costs more. LDSI have built the world's most forensically-sound infrastructure for collecting, processing and hosting corporate data material to litigation, investigations and corporate transactions – securely and cohesively, around the world. Through full-service operations in the United States, United Kingdom, Europe and Austral-Asia, LDSI provides a complete range of legal document services. Core offerings include consulting, data recovery; electronic discovery; project management; software, hosting and review platforms; staffing, training and skills certification for litigation technology professionals.
